

CHAPTER OF RECENT HISTORY.

President Lincoln and the Virginia Rebels

SECRETARY SEWARD'S CONDITION.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON.

The Plot of the Assassins.

WASHINGTON, April 20, 1865.

The following is the history of the authority recently given for the assembling of the Rebel Legislature of Virginia:

While President Lincoln was in Richmond, he was visited upon by Judge John A. Campbell, who observed:

"I had an interview with Jefferson Davis, Benjamin and Breckinridge just before they left, and said to him: 'The military power of the Confederacy is broken. Its independence is hopeless. It only remains for us to make the best terms we can. The trouble is, the President of the United States cannot enter into negotiations with you; but he does recognize the States, and can confer with their regular authorities. Under the name of State Rights, so universally held in the South, the troops from Virginia—the Confederate Government—will recognize the right of the Virginia Legislature to control them. If you, Mr. Lincoln, will permit that body to convene, it will doubtless recall them to the field.'"

Campbell's arguments for this course were many and specious. The President was attracted by his absorbing desire to listen attentively; but he said: "Judge Campbell, let us have no misunderstanding. I will see you once more, in black and white, my only terms. And he immediately wrote the same proposition which Mr. Seward took from him to the Hampton Roads conference.

I. Territorial integrity of the Republic.

II. Retraction of Executive or Congressional action on the subject of Slavery.

III. To armistice.

To see he added a fourth condition, that, if further conferences still persisted in the war, now it had become utterly hopeless, their property should be re-possessed.

Campbell prayed for a modification of third article, but the President was immovable. He said:

"We will not negotiate with men as long as they are fighting against us. The last condition established the sole and deliberate determination of the country."

On the steamboat which brought Mr. Lincoln down the James River, he wrote this order to Gen. Weitzel:

"You will permit the persons who call themselves the Virginia Legislature to convene in Richmond, for the purpose of withdrawing the Virginia troops from the Rebel army, but you will not allow them to use any reasonable language, or adopt any reasonable measures."

Without consulting with any person whatever, or advising any of its contents, he sealed this document, and sent it to Gen. Weitzel by a United States Senator.

But the very day of his death, he received a letter from Judge Campbell, tinged with the usual Rebel insolence, ignoring altogether the proposition which the President had made to him in writing, and saying:

"It is true that the military power of the Confederacy is destroyed, but the spirit of the Southern people still remains unbroken. If you want to conciliate them, it will be wise for you to grant an armistice, and necessary to treat leniently their leading public men, and seek their assistance."

This was too much even for Mr. Lincoln's good nature. He characterized Campbell's course as ungrateful and outrageous. Meanwhile, the capitulation of Gen. Lee obliterated the necessity of conveying the Rebel Legislature, and he sent an order countermanding the above.

Of the President's last official acts was a deed of mercy toward his enemies. He expressly stated that he meant to give the leading Confederates an opportunity to leave the country. This telegram from Fort Sumter came to Washington:

"Dear Mr. Lincoln, I am writing to you from Europe. What shall we do?"

Mr. Lincoln directed the authorities to let them go. A few years later he fell by the assassin's bullet, and beside his death-bed a member of the Cabinet countermanded that order. Fortunately for their own lives, Thompson and Tucker did not come into the United States after the conspirators had murdered the only man who could have saved them from their doom.

Mr. Seward exhibits wonderful vitality, but his physicians have little hope that his mouth will ever recover its symmetry. It is likely to be awry, and probably power will be lacking entirely to close the lower jaw. Several days since the Secretary, with characteristic selfishness wrote upon a slate: "For myself I am nothing; but the people should have more useful for their President."

Evidence discloses that there were ten conspirators in the plot: that at a meeting held in Memphis they acted by the assassin of the President. Our authorities have matter which says: "It becomes your happy lot to destroy this tyrant. You can select the eye, the blade or the bullet; but you know the cup has once been tried, and is failed."

The unhappy lady—the daughter of a New-England Senator—whom Booth was affianced, is plunged in profound grief; but with womanly fidelity, is slow to believe in the guilt of this appalling crime, and asks with trembling pathos, for evidence of his innocence.

President Johnson wisely determines to show the world, that in spite of this fearful tragedy, the protection of our Executive is not, even now, to be in the hands of a guard, but in the love and vigilance of the people. He exposes himself in public places with the utmost indifference. A gentleman meeting him on Wednesday, in the parlor of the Kirkwood-House, asked:

"Mr. President, it is wise for you thus to jeopardize yourself?"

He replied: "Yes. I have already been shot at twice, you remember, without injury. Threatened men live long."

There is no reason to doubt that President Johnson's general policy will be wise, bold, like all officials in this country, to be directly subject to the judgment and desires of the people that he could not long pursue any course contravening them.

There were complaints during his military administration in Tennessee, that he permitted himself to be surrounded and sometimes influenced by old political associates, not altogether good or pure men. But under this new and momentous responsibility he will, doubtless, guard against that error.

The most sanguine Rebels will hardly hope to intimidate him. In the dark days which preceded Grant's last invasion of Kentucky, Bush, then in command of the Army of the Ohio, was about to evacuate Nashville, Gov. Johnson implored, expostulated and stormed to no purpose.

He finally declared, under the solemnities of an oath, that if all the rest of the army left, he would remain with his four Middle Tennessee regiments, defend the city to the last and perish in its ashes, before it should be given up to the enemy.

Booth then left a Garrison, which, though weak, proved sufficient to hold the capital of Tennessee.
